Excerpt: .to mar those rites, and slay us both: But one hope linger d yet, -- he might relent, And with that hope, to meet him there I went. Father, he spurn d me!--frantic as I was, And kneeling at his feet, the sole loved cause Of all my anguish. Then I deem d I could See him die inch by inch; and that his blood, Ebbing away thus, could not change my mood. I raised my hand with the intent to kill; But when I look d upon his countenance, Love, in my bosom, reign d all-powerful still; My fearful purpose was subdued at once: H And at his feet, ay, even at his feet--down, Powerless I fell, in long--long--deathlike swoon! I knew no more, --nor know I yet, --for when I waken d from that stupor, he was gone. I know not how he fell; but this I know, I would have died to shield him from the blow; So all-engrossing was that love of mine. But it is past--and I must meet death now; Nor do I shrink--nor does my heart repine; What am I!--High Heaven!--branded and accurst! If the axe spared me--would my heart not burst? Where could I hide me?--all mankind revile And turn from me as from a thing most vile. The holy sanctuary opes for me no more, As it hath done, its once protecting door. Where could I hide me?--in some desert cave, Like maniac scoop, day after day,...
